KOKODA TRACK

Miss Halpin's Adventures!!

During the school holidays I travelled to Papua New Guinea with my Dad and a few mates to trek the Kokoda track. The track is 96km long with very steep inclines and declines, lots of rainforests, river crossings, bamboo huts and a wide array of vicious looking bugs.

The Kokoda Track is a very important part of Australian war history. Our soldiers fought on the track against the Japanese to prevent them from invading Australia, they sacrificed their lives to ensure our country remained safe and many paid the ultimate price by dying whilst protecting our country.

I spent 10 days in PNG, 8 of those were on the track. We experienced a range of weather conditions from extreme sun and humidity to pouring rain. We trekked through knee deep mud, swamps, over large tree roots and through many villages along the way. Meeting the local people and especially the kids was one of the highlights of my trip, they were so excited when we arrived and wanted to sing for us and play footy!!

One of the challenges I faced over there was the fact that I couldn't shower for 8 days, we washed off in streams and waterfalls which definitely pushed me outside of my comfort zone. The sleeping arrangements were in small tents or bamboo huts, I slept very well as the days of trekking were tiring.

The best moment of my trip was walking through the arches at Owers Corner with my dad. I was really proud of his efforts and he pushed himself every day over the challenging aspects of the track. The experience I had with him and my mates is one that I will never forget and it has created some truly special memories for me.

Top right: Me, Dad and George (Dad's porter who helped him carry his gear)

Middle: An ammunition dump, some of these grenades were still live with the pins still intact.

Bottom: Me with my mates from home, Mick, Mick, Dad and Craig.
